But the number of these is not alarming, even though adults in our daily lives are capable of this foolishness. Show more CommentsClose comments Honestly, raising a fivenager, I developed a resistance, or you would call "intunctions" from the frequent choraminant episode and periological temperament tantrums. So one day, I was driving and thinking about thinking and other things, feeling being worked with heavy emotions, mind going a mile per minute, and hit me. I realized that I was having a temperament tantrum, and I've probably been there years. I'll keep it cool and short for this post because I can write a post for days if you leave me. However, I have to share the appearance of unwilling on my face when I realized that it had an internally temperament tantrum. I know I did not throw a fit in my head. Now I have to check me before destroying me. Most of us know the temperament tantrums we see in our children who include some of these shared negative behaviors: kicking screaming whining / throwing things falling on the ground But and if I said that out of kicking and shouting, they experience internal symptoms that NOS, as adults, especially the hands, share at an expanded level. The only difference between you and your children is that you have better control of your body (give or take). Imagine this: you are driving, taking care of your own business, addressed your next messages, thinking of the fight you had with your daughter this morning. Or maybe you had struggles with your parents and your support, or an ex that he does not seem to take things the way you want it. Or maybe God did not answer a prayer that you have prayed, but having to go through the pruning that is necessary, and then boom. You are in integral temperament tantrum mode. For me, I often remember an offense or disappointment earlier on the day or even in the last month that I would send me on an emotional roller coaster. I would be the turbace of temperament with uncontrolled emotions without any sign from it outside. I was literally having an emotional collapse in my car. I do not feel that I know enough about this to give strategies to overcome them. However, I encourage you to become more aware of your thought processes when you emerge from tempering tantrums. Then, if you read this and remember a in which you have experienced this, know that you are not alone. In the next time your child has a tantrum, I encourage you to sit and share with them they Your. Let them know that it's okay to feel a certain way, but there's no problem to display it that way. And be transparent; Let them know that you are also working on it and surpass you together. These actions are what I am doing with my daughter to connect and build intimacy. And it's helping! Takeaway as hands, we focus on raising our children and teaching them as they should go, as the Bible instructs. We try to help them understand their emotions and discipline our way to less tantrums. But make sure you are doing the same for yourself. Make sure that you are pouring the wisdom from the Bible in your heart, making space for you to see and understand your own emotional state, and make the steps / disciplines you need to grow in your emotional maturity . We all have this inner child who seems to be higher and higher as we get older. Maybe you were a child who had courtesies frequently and never met with empathy. Give yourself, your child inner, what you currently give your children, patience and grace. I did not write this post to condemn me or by our emotional instabilities. My goal is just so you know you're not alone. Even the most sibal hand, most together still have to take care of their inner child. And when frustrating, guilt, manipulation or anything raises his ugly head, remember that you are growing. Each episode does not define you. They alarm you. God knows all his imperfect parts and he still cares, now it is love! - Chyna Nicole If you find it difficult to navigate your emotions or causing struggles in your relationships, I encourage you to reach a chat.
