Todd Blankenship, creator of LUTs, presents a new pack of free LUTs for Shutterstock, inspired by film and photo work. This pack offers a range of clean and cinematic looks that serve as a foundation for grading footage. The LUTs were designed specifically for Log footage and may be too intense for standard color curves. A video tutorial is available to demonstrate how to use these free LUTs in your NLE. FreshLUTs, a library of over 100,000 LUTs, offers an extensive collection of free LUTs that can be used by anyone. This platform makes it easy to find and sort through LUTs based on camera type or style, with preview functionality available before downloading. To access the free LUTs pack and learn more about using them, click here: <https://link>. Additionally, you can explore freshLUTs for a continually growing collection of LUTs. LUTs are applied to provide more detailed information, including gamma, color, key, and style settings. As a social feature, users can view the creator's name and download history. The search page allows filtering by desired looks, such as S-Log3, warm tint, high key, or specific styles like retro or noir. Users can also upload their own LUTs to share with others. This feature makes it easier to share work and can be used as an alternative to sending Google Drive links. What are your thoughts on freshLUTs? Have you used them before? I recently purchased a comprehensive package of Luts from these vendors, which I appreciate but still can't figure out the meaning behind their names. However, IWLTBAP's offer with 10+ free LUTs caught my attention initially. I particularly enjoy their LOG to Rec709 conversion LUTs, which I use for converting V-Log footage on my GH5. Lutify.me offers a pack of 7 free LUTs with a modern aesthetic that appeals to me. The Hiddenite dark and cold LUT, as well as the Hackmanite cross-process inspired LUTs, stand out for their unique qualities. My personal favorites from Orange83's collection are #1 and #7, which I found particularly appealing. Additionally, Premium Beat (by Shutterstock) features 20 color grading presets called PremiumGrades with a punchy look that can be adjusted to suit one's taste. Rocketstock (by Shutterstock) offers 35 free cinematic LUTs, including vintage options, while SmallHD provides 7 nice LUTs with Hollywood-inspired looks. I believe these are among the best free LUTs available, but there may be other great ones missing from this list – if you know of any, please share in the comments!
