These are the strongest Godzillas that was ever created so far this maybe be updatedSo I'll start with shin Godzilla he is only good if you give him prep because he can adapt to beings and things to make it limitlessThis been stated in the movieNow space Godzilla it been stated he has endless space energy which gives him endless power in official guides You may say he couldn't be endless because he got defeated well you are right and wrongSpace Godzilla was stronger than Godzilla jr but Godzilla jr broke the space Godzilla crystals on his shoulder that absorbs all the energy that gives him that powerNow this is where it's get better IDW GodzillaThis Godzilla killed his own god who created everything time and space every dimension and the universe Godzilla exist in And this Godzilla got all the power of this god stated by the author this could be nigh omnipotent or lower (high ball) omnipotentThere's feat of this by the way I quote "in divine form, Godzilla can create a rock so heavy that he himself can't lift and then he'd lift it anyway." This can make him seem on that level of omnipotent or near on that levelly the way base form godzilla also killed SpaceGodzilla who been stated to be a solar system buster But the strongest version of Godzilla is this GodzillaCalled almighty deity Godzilla This version is omnipotent,ommsicent,omnipresent he has infinite powerBioThe Almighty Deity Godzilla is Infinite/truly indestructible Universe CreatorGodzilla is in the Films Category of the list. In the Manga, Godzilla is said to be the creator of his respective universe and the pinnacle of life and evolution having been the first life form on earth.Around the end of Godzilla's Manga, Godzilla completed "The Destroyer Of Worlds" ritualistic process merging his life energy with the energy that sustains all of reality and becoming "The Almighty Deity". Humanity is left ease minded that Godzilla's God-Like traits and Omnipotence will keep a keen eye over his creation.Those of you that pay extra attention to the Godzilla Films, you might already know who The Almighty Deity is.The Almighty Deity is basically the creator of the Universe and reality i.e God. He's also the only confirmed fully Omnipotent being in the Godzillaverse. You know what this means right? Exactly, when Godzilla merged his life energy with the energy that sustains reality AKA The Almighty Deity, Godzilla became The Almighty Deity. The Almighty Deity is said to have limitless power and abilities. Not surprisingly for an Omnipotent being. You G-Fans know where I'm getting at do you? You guessed it. When Godzilla merged his life energy with the energy that sustains all of reality becoming The Almighty Deity, Godzilla, himself, became Omnipotent. Don't agree? There's the Manga, there's the proof,the End This Godzilla is like the Divine entities from Marvel or DCGo here YouTube/Godzilla_Misconceptions_Volume_1#Did_Godzilla_become_22God_Godzilla22_in_a_manga.3F this version of Godzilla is also infinite he is called final wars Godzilla he was about to die right but Godzilla got an infinite power boost If you don't believe me go here As the release of Godzilla vs. Kong, the fourth movie in the Godzilla MonsterVerse, inches closer, we decided it's time to revisit the mighty Titans who've appeared in the kaiju series so far—and who's the strongest of them all.Godzilla is the longest-running film franchise in the world. It was created by the Japanese studio Toho in 1954. Since then, there have been over 32 films produced by them, and four produced by American studios Legendary Pictures and TriStar Pictures.The Legendary Pictures offshoot of the series, a crossover between Godzilla and another popular character Kong, is popularly known as the MonsterVerse.Read on to find out the 15 mightiest—and weakest—Titans in the MonsterVerse.15. Spore Mantis Spore Mantis | Source: FandomSpore Mantises are giant insects that have wooden, tree-like bodies that bestow them with great camouflage abilities in their forest habitat.They are strong and have high durability due to their sturdy structure. They have jaws that are strong enough to crush bones, and they can hunt prey smaller or equal in size to them.However, they back away in the presence of Skullcrawlers, so they are not ultimately that strong.This might just mean that Spore Mantises are the weakest Titan in the MonsterVerse.The next installment in the MonsterVerse, Godzilla vs. Kong, is due to hit screens on March 31.14. Sker BuffaloesSker Buffaloes are essentially oversized water buffaloes, with a few additional features. Sker Buffalo | Source: FandomThe amphibious bovines' bulky bodies are covered in algae due to the time they spend underwater.It is speculated that they can run fast when provoked and have massive horns, which they are said to be able to use to attack their enemies. However, we never actually see them do this—they are usually seen as large, lumbering, slow-moving creatures who can easily fall prey to Skullcrawlers.13. Mire SquidMire Squids are shown in Kong: Skull Island. Their biology resembles that of squids. Mire Squid | Source: FandomThey are predators who lurk in the waters of Skull Island and have extremely flexible arms that they use to constrict prey that's even as big as Kong. Although they are aquatic, they are able to put up a fight even when dragged out of water.They are able to expel thick clouds of heated ink and create powerful whirlpools in water.However, they are easily killed by Kong when he stomps on them.12. Mother LonglegsMother Longlegs are giant arachnids that are 5 to 7 meters tall and are named so due to their incredibly long legs which are filled with poison that can be used to incapacitate victims. Mother Longlegs | Source: FandomThey are equipped with pincer-like claws that allow them to easily grab their prey, are very speedy and agile, and possess considerable strength.They are also able to fire webbing at their opponents to slow them down.However, they are ultimately no match for Kong, who is able to crush them to death. READ: Does 'Godzilla vs. Kong' Set up 'Godzilla 3'? 11. PsychovulturesThese avian reptiles first appear in Kong: Skull Island, and bizarrely enough, are shown to voluntarily ingest toxic puffertfish, which induces psychoactive effects and causes them to go on a hunting rampage, destroying everything they encounter. Psychovulture | Source: WikizillaPsychovultures can camouflage themselves to hide from predators and prey by perching as a flock on leafless trees. They can emit bolts of electricity from their mouths, fly at great speeds, are strong enough to rip a human's limbs off with their snouts, and have thermal vision.However, they are easily killed by gunshots or if bisected with sharp objects.10. SkullcrawlersThese giant, reptilian monsters make their first appearance in Kong: Skull Island as the primary antagonists, vs SkullcrawlerThey are extremely aggressive pack hunters who are shown to have attacked and killed Kong's parents when he was a child, which would have been a remarkable feat considering their size.They are intelligent, agile beings with an extremely strong sense of smell, a powerful tongue that can speedily grab prey, and a muscular tail that can be used to attack opponents.However, they are ultimately no match for Kong, who is able to eviscerate them by ripping out their tongues, which are connected to their internal organs.9. ScyllaScylla is another squid-like Titan, who is amphibious in nature. Scylla | Source: FandomShe is covered in spiky armor that allows her to topple buildings and to easily withstand bullets and missiles.Scylla also has spiky-tipped legs that are hard enough to tear through solid rock and tendrils that allow her to grasp smaller enemies and destroy buildings.She can emit large amounts of liquid nitrogen from her body, which helps slow down the rise in sea levels caused by global warming.8. MethuselahMethuselah is a Biblical Titan. Methuselah | Source: FandomAlthough he moves slowly and clumsily due to the extreme weight of his back, which is made up of rock and vegetation, Methuselah can still cause a significant amount of damage with his powerful jaws and massive horns.He is extremely durable due to the nature of his back, and can easily camouflage himself as a mountain.7. BehemothThis sloth-like monster with the massive tusks of a woolly mammoth is a prehistoric creature we first saw in King of Monsters. He is also a Biblical Titan, like Methuselah. Behemoth | Source: FandomAlthough not very well equipped for combat, Behemoth is exceptionally durable. His fur is fireproof, and he can also attack with his claws when standing on his hind legs if needed. READ: Is 'Godzilla vs. Kong' worth Watching? A Complete Review 6. M.U.T.O.s We have seen three unnamed M.U.T.O.s (Massive Unidentified Terrestrial Organisms)—two in the first Godzilla as the primary antagonists, and a third in King of Monsters as a minor Titan who responds to the call of King Ghidorah. M.U.T.O | Source: FandomThese prehistoric parasites trample anything in their path, determined to get their fill of radiation, which is what nourishes them.M.U.T.O.s have dangerous hook-like claws that enable them to hack and stab at opponent Titans—strong enough to draw blood from Godzilla when they battle him. They are also strong enough to not sustain any damage despite military fire raining down upon them.They are intelligent, agile, and immensely physically strong. Although they are not as massive as Godzilla, they use their size to their advantage by outmaneuvering him.Though they were able to wreak significant havoc and dodge Godzilla, they ultimately could not defeat his extreme strength and nuclear beam.5. MothraAnother mighty Titan, Mothra, may be considered docile and benevolent compared to her Titan counterparts, but that doesn't mean she's not tough. DeathMothra is considered the "giver of life", and has various powerful abilities. This includes a stinger that's powerful enough to pierce Rodan's geothermal armor and her ability to continue fighting despite sustaining severe burns due to proximity to Rodan. She can also fly at incredible speeds and can fire blasts of spider-like silk that can immobilize and trap other titans. She can also reincarnate by laying an egg in her imago state (the final stage during metamorphosis), from which she will be reborn with her memories intact after her previous body dies.Mothra is extremely intelligent too, showing loyalty towards Godzilla even when Ghidorah usurps his position as alpha.4. RodanRodan is a giant, flying pterosaur. He is formidable in combat, as seen in Godzilla: King of Monsters. Rodan | Source: FandomHe radiates heat measuring over 2000°F, which makes him able to burn opponents upon close contact with his body. He uses this power to nearly burn Mothra to death in King of Monsters.Rodan also possesses the ability to create a sonic thunderclap beneath him when he flies, due to his massive wingspan. This can easily decimate buildings with the tornado-like force generated.He is entirely bulletproof because of his psychoactive effects and causes them to go on a hunting rampage, destroying everything they encounter. Psychovulture | Source: WikizillaPsychovultures can camouflage themselves to hide from predators and prey by perching as a flock on leafless trees. They can emit bolts of electricity from their mouths, fly at great speeds, are strong enough to withstand bullets from military helicopters and Skullcrawlers and still defend himself. He has powerful hearing, speed, strength, and agility.He is also intelligent enough to differentiate between his enemies and allies, as we see when he kills Skullcrawlers and a group of Mother Longlegs but spares the life of a human. READ: What Is Kong's Ax Made of in 'Godzilla vs. Kong'? All of this is despite him not being fully grown yet! Over 30 years have shown to have passed since Kong: Skull Island, so Kong has gotten bigger and presumably more powerful.This merits Kong third place at the very least—we may see him climb up the list based on what takes place in Godzilla vs. Kong.2. King GhidorahWe got to see the might of this Titan in full glory in Godzilla: King of Monsters, and it is evident that this former King of Monsters (before being dethroned by Godzilla) is not to be trifled with. King Ghidorah | Source: FandomHe has the power to generate hurricane-force winds with his ability to fly at subsonic speeds, can create lightning storms where he goes and can drain energy from sources around him—including Godzilla's signature nuclear energy.All of this certainly makes the three-headed serpent formidable enough to be called Godzilla's main nemesis. READ: Who Is Stronger Between Godzilla and Kong? 1. GodzillaGodzilla - The King of Monsters is the strongest titan (kaiju) in the MonsterVerse. He managed to plug a hole in the Earth down to the middle with his atomic breath and also possesses the ability to heal via radiation absorption. Godzilla's truly a god even among titans. Godzilla | Source: FandomThe OG Titan is rarely, if ever, seen defeated, even when he goes up against Titans who can fight against him well, vs KongOne can definitely count him as the strongest Titan>About Godzilla vs. KongGodzilla vs. Kong is an American kaiju-action movie. It is a sequel to Godzilla: King of Monsters and Kong: Skull Island and is the latest entry in the WB-Legendary MonsterVerse. The film stars Alexander Skarsgard, Millie Bobby Brown, Rebecca Hall, Brian Tyree Henry, and others.Godzilla vs. Kong took in $285 million in just 12 days in theatres. As of now, it has grossed over $400 million, becoming the most successful movie in the pandemic era to date.Humans have captured King Kong from Skull Island to help him find his true home. With them is Jia, a young orphaned girl with whom he has formed a unique and powerful bond. But Kong's return comes just in time for Godzilla cutting a swath of destruction across the globe. As the fearsome monsters square off in an epic battle for the ages, humanity looks to wipe out both of them and take back the planet once and for all. Godzilla is a brawler. Yes, he's also a city stomper who puts insurance companies into a cold sweat, but he's mostly here for a fight. Of all the Godzilla films out there (and there are well over thirty at this point), only a few don't feature a monster skirmish of some kind. It isn't long before the entire draw of a Godzilla film relies more on his foe than the big lizard himself. As Godzilla faces what looks to be his biggest battle in the upcoming Godzilla vs. Kong, let's take stock of all the enemies he's tussled with so far. Key word: enemies. Not pals. So Jet Jaguar is out. 25. Kamoebus Image via Toho Maybe Kamoebus is the coolest monster on this list. He certainly looks good. Though as a giant turtle-thing, Kamoebus treads a bit into Gamera territory. The main demerit hurting Kamoebus is the fact that he dies offscreen. When we meet him in Godzilla: Tokyo S.O.S., he's already been killed by Godzilla. While that certainly raises Godzilla's profile, it also means we never get to see what could have been. 24. Oookondoru Image via Toho Oookondoru is straight up a giant condor. Its origins and purpose are unclear. It simply pops up to annoy Godzilla in Ebirah, Horror of the Deep and quickly dies for that sin. You might even mistake it for Rodan. But Rodan would never go down like that. 23. Kamacuras Image via Toho It's difficult to get excited for monsters that are just giant versions of things we already have, as these lower entries reflect. Kamacuras is essentially a giant praying mantis Son of Godzilla uses as a bully for Minilla. Praying Mantises are naturally creepy and make a good model for giant monsters, but it should be a starting point, not the whole ballgame. Plus, they aren't much of a match when Daddy Godzilla shows up. 22. Kumonga Image via Toho Also from Son of Godzilla, Kumonga is a giant spider, one that can shoot webbing strong enough to briefly trap Godzilla. Unlike the wimpy Kamacuras, Kumonga presents a real challenge, one that requires the combined forces of Godzilla and Minilla to overcome. So he's like a fun father-son project. He's certainly not the kind of monster who threatens the world, though he does make a nice appearance wrecking stuff in Final Wars. 21. Ebirah Image via Toho Ebirah might just be a giant crab, but he has personality. For some reason, his entire existence is to guard one island and murder anyone who tries to enter or leave it. That's it. He doesn't seem to even move. But that dedication to his task is admirable. Furthermore, he seems like an especially grumpy monster, even though he barely has a face. Godzilla literally declaims him, which is maybe more gruesome than he deserves. But also, don't mess with Godzilla. 20. Gabara Image via Toho Gabara doesn't exist. He appears only within the imagination of a young child, who uses him as a monster representation of his real-life bully, also named Gabara. So that's something to consider. It's also hard not to consider the way he looks. Gabara is a very silly monster, sort of a long-neck, cat thing. Honestly, at least it's a design, goofy though it may be. 19. MUTOs Image via Warner Bros. The MUTOs are very angular, hard-shelled monsters that let Gareth Edwards thrill audiences with monster action in his 2014 American Godzilla, while saving his full-on Godzilla reveal for as late into the film as possible. They are somewhat successful in this task. Nevertheless, they remain visually uninteresting, borderline incomprehensible thanks to all their elbows and other poky parts. It is cool that they seem to be in love with each other and display sexual dimorphism, with the female being significantly larger than the male. 18. Orga Image via Toho A lot of Godzilla's later enemies transform throughout the film, not emerging as their full selves until the final fight. Orga goes another route, simply beaming down to Earth when it's time to fight Godzilla. His transportation evolves from a flying rock to an alien spacecraft, but he appears fully formed. This means we don't get to know much about the monster. He looks cool, almost like a Pacific Rim monster, but doesn't stand out among other monsters on this list. He does get points for trying to swallow Godzilla, though he learns the hard way why that's a bad idea. 17. Megalon Image via Toho Megalon's has a very insect feel to him. He seems to be mostly beetle-inspired with a little cockroach thrown in for good measure. He also boasts sharp appendages for hands, though to don't actually look all that sharp. Megalon's main fault is that he seems to be a bit stupid, which is at least a personality trait. More than that, the features that make Megalon's design interesting simply don't register when compared to his much wilder fighting partner Gigan. 16. Megaguirus Image via Toho In its final form, Megaguirus is kind of a flying scorpion, complete with a stinger used to stab Godzilla and steal his nuclear energy. She's a formidable monster, but she starts as thousands of much smaller insect-like Meganula (they're different monsters in the same way a face-hugger is different than a xenomorph, but work with me here). Godzilla can take on something giant, but he has a much harder time dealing with a swarm of kaiju mosquitoes. This was a much more successful element of the Megaguirus life-cycle than the giant monster it ultimately produces. 15. King Kong Image via Toho Don't worry, the real King Kong King Kong would never end up so far down a list of greatest giant monsters. This is just for the Toho Kong Godzilla fights in 1962's King Kong vs. Godzilla. And as Kong's go, this is the bottom of the barrel. He's pretty rough-looking and totally lacks the dignity of a proper Kong. Having said that, he does have some moves. For instance, at one point he tries to shove a tree down Godzilla's throat. 14. Titanosaurus Image via Toho Titanosaurus is the real star of 1975's Terror of MechaGodzilla. But because he doesn't get the title treatment, he feels a little disrespected and underrated. He's a very tall monster, with thick, beefy legs. Atop his long neck sits a great dragon face with a cool fin coming out the back of his head. He's also as lethal underwater as on land. It's a shame he never got another big showcase. 13. King Caesar Image via Toho Just going by looks, it's hard to beat King Caesar. He's a mythical lion monster that stands on two legs. Just an incredible design. The problem is he doesn't do much. It takes all of Godzilla vs. MechaGodzilla for him to finally wake up (thanks to a lovely song) and get to fighting. He and Godzilla are actually pals at first, but they have a pretty good fight once Final Wars rolls around. If I could pick any monster for a modern return, this would be the guy. We never got to see his full potential. 12. Battra Image via Toho Yes, everyone knows Mothra. But did you know Mothra had a punk rock, cigarette-smoking, no-good cousin? Battra is Mothra's evil counterpart, complete with his own heavy metal larva form and everything. Both want to protect the Earth but Battra thinks that means getting rid of humans, which isn't the craziest idea. That argument becomes moot with the arrival of Godzilla, however, and the two must work together to defeat him. Sadly, Battra doesn't make it. He dies saving the humans he hated so much. 11. SpaceGodzilla Image via Toho SpaceGodzilla looks amazing. He's basically a bigger Godzilla with more teeth and these giant crystals growing out of his shoulders. His origin is too wild to go into here (it involves a lot of monster DNA and a black hole and what the heck, a white hole too), but he presents Godzilla with a foe that is both big and smart. SpaceGodzilla kidnaps and imprisons Baby Godzilla to draw Godzilla out for battle. Unfortunately, SpaceGodzilla's crystals end up being more of a hindrance than an asset as they make for very large, unprotected targets. Also unfortunate, most of SpaceGodzilla's movie. 10. Rodan Image via Warner Bros. Rodan is very popular, one of the all-time legendary monsters. But consider this: Rodan's design, while classic, is just a bit on the boring side. On top of that, he and Godzilla don't actually fight all that often. They're good pals in most of their appearances together. Rodan certainly isn't a poor monster, but when it comes to the big ones, he's a little on the overrated side. 9. Baragon Image via Toho I am a sucker for low to the ground, quadruped monsters. What hope do they ever have of beating Godzilla? Yet they keep trying anyway. Such is the case with Baragon. In his best appearance, he's a heroic guardian of Earth who fights a malevolent Godzilla even though he has absolutely no chance of succeeding (this is in the incredible Giant Monsters All-Out Attack). Baragon is borderline adorable, with the body of a bear-like creature and a head not unlike a bat, and it hurts to see him go down. 8. Anguirus Image via Toho Godzilla's first foe, the legendary Anguirus. Another quadruped, Anguirus has a much more prehistoric look to him, taking many features from the Ankylosaur. He has a long snout like a crocodile and a turtle-shell back covered in spikes. Though he and Godzilla start off fighting each other in Godzilla Rides Again, they spend most of the series as good pals. Aside from Godzilla, Anguirus has one of the series' greatest roars. A great monster, and a great friend. But also a great foe. Those Raids Again fights are no joke. 7. MechaGodzilla Image via Toho Some of these characters have shown up so many times, and with so many different origins, it can be hard to average out who they are for ranking purposes. That's especially true of MechaGodzilla, who has been an alien weapon against Earth, a human weapon against Earth, a human weapon against Godzilla, and once a human weapon against Godzilla but with the original Godzilla's bones which wake up and take control of the metal behemoth. But across all this, MechaGodzilla remains a near-perfect representation of how cool it would be if Godzilla were a robot. Just stay away from the M.O.G.U.E.R.A. version. 6. Hedorah Image via Toho Far and away the most disgusting monster on this list, Hedorah is a product of pollution. It is pollution. And as such, it flings weaponized filth wherever it goes. Hedorah is also one of the first monsters to enjoy multiple forms. Because of his inscrutable nature, it takes Godzilla a couple of tries to even figure out how to wound Hedorah in a way that matters. Eventually, he gets the job done but not before Hedorah scars half his face. John Lithgow Joins Robert De Niro in Martin Scorsese's 'Killers of the Flower Moon' It's a 'New Year's Eve' reunion!
