To sign up for Gmail you need to create a Google Account first. With your new account, you can use the Gmail username and password to login to other useful services such as YouTube, Google Play, and Google Drive too. Before you set up any new Gmail accounts, make sure to log out of any existing Gmail account that you currently have. Learn how to log out of Gmail from here. Next, go to your device's browser and navigate to the Google Account login page. There, click on "Create an account" in the dropdown menu. Choose if it is for: Personal use Child Work or business. Then follow all the steps shown on your screen to set up the new Gmail account. You can try Gmail with a Business Workspace account instead of personal one as its better option. With this, you get more storage and professional email addresses. Try Google Workspace For your username, make sure it is not being used or very similar to another existing one. Some usernames are reserved too because some people impersonate identity using them. You can report anyone who try to impersonate you by going to Google Terms of Use page. Unfortunately Gmail cannot resolve this with third parties but they can help on how to avoid them.
