This article is displayed in the winter issue of the Extremetech magazine, which has gone on novilli in January. When people think of personal computers, almost always think of the CPU, or memory, or even graphic chips. They often forget that inside a PC it is a purely mechanical device that runs up to 15,000 revolutions per minute. In a more standard desktop disc, which turns on a Tamer 7.200 rpm, a point near the external track moves at about 48 miles per hour. In a typical working day, this means that the outer edge of your hard drive has traveled 384 miles.but this is not the most incredible part. Each hard drive consists of one or more dishes, called substrate, typically made with very thin glass. We do not talk here of the window glass, but a glass or a formulated glass glass, which is highly shiny and coated with a thin layer of magnetic material. The unit can record the data on both sides of a tray orient the magnetic domains inside the material. A direction represents a digital 1, the other to 0. In modern high capacity unit, the orientation of the magnetic domain is often vertical (facing up or down). The key to all this is the heads. While the material that makes up the plates and magnetic media is certainly important, the reading and writing functions are managed by the heads, which barely fly a micron over the plate surface. To put this in context, human hair is about 200 microns in diameter. Keep in mind that the plate moves under the head at 7,200 rpm. "that 'how to fly a jet on a foot above the ground. Since the drives today can have up to five plates, each with two recording surfaces, it is possible to have up to ten heads, each hover itself on its own surface. Even multiple heads are part of a single mechanism; they cannot move independently. This makes them easier to control. Continue ... Jose A. Bernat bacet / getty imageshundreds of thousands of years in the process, every underground cave is completely unique. Formed by the erosion of water, with occasional help from some strong winds, there is no wonder of sea caves A huge tourist draw for those who love the mother's glasses natures. Simon Dannhauer / Getty imagesan Excellent diving site, tourists and local Alike Love visit this amazing set of caves. The two caves known as Cenote Dos Ojos were created by two 70-foot seckhole that were connected by a narrow underwater passage. If you take one of the local guided tours or enters Scuba alone, see lots of submarine fish and two types of shrimp. Rather stay on the water surface? LA-- you can enjoy the bat cave! Sechu / Getty imagesplaya de las catedrales, or the beach of the cathedrals, is located off the coast of the Cantabrian sea. To maintain human effect on these caves at a minimum, there is a limited number of people allowed in this attraction every day. You can make a reservation online in advance to make sure you and your traveling companions will be able to enter. The arches and caves that make this place famous are easily accessible during the low tide that occurs twice a day. This photo is so reminiscent of our favorites Naturally splendid rock formations all over the world. Lindsay Guido / Getty imagesysyes, Wisconsin is not at any place near any salt water, then calling this sea cave could be a bit of a stretch, but this hidden gem is too amazing to jump.
