Let's say you've always dreamed of opening a pizzeria. Love the pizza, and you did your homework to understand how much you will waste a new pizza business and how much money you could expect to earn every year in profit. The building and equipment will cost $ 500,000 in advance and annual expenses (ingredients, employee salaries, utilities) will cost a further $ 250,000. With the annual earnings of $ 325,000, you expect to make a $ 75,000 profit every year. Not bad. The only problem is that you don't have $ 750,000 (Building + Equipment + Expenses) in cash to cover all these costs. You could take a loan, but that it increases interest. What about the research of investors who will give you money in exchange for a quota of the property's property? This is the logic that companies use when they make the decision to issue shares to private investors à €
