Photo: Fred Rogers ProductionsToday is the birthday of Fred Rogers, the man who taught us how to look for the helpers, who understood the power of play before it became a national prescription, who could rock a zip-up sweater made by his mother like nobody’s business. I miss him, and I miss his show.While you can find Mister Rogers’ Neighborhood episodes on PBS Kids, Amazon Prime Video and iTunes, you can also now watch the programs online on Fred Rogers Production’s new website MisterRogers.org. New (old) episodes are released on the first and third Monday of every month. Screenshot: MisterRogers.orgThere are only a small handful of episodes up at a time, but I believe Mister Rogers wouldn’t have been a fan of binge-watch culture anyway. The show is meant to be absorbed slowly, and savored. Weeks ago, the site featured Mister Rogers’ visit to the crayon factory, an episode my daughter and I have enjoyed together multiple times (“Now watch the crayons come into those crayon collectors”—what a thrill). This week on the site, Mister Rogers walks on stilts and talks about how long it took him to master the task. Show your kids Mister Rogers’ Neighborhood today on his birthday, and any day. It remains the best type of screen time. Digital Trends may earn a commission when you buy through links on our site. Sons of Anarchy is the perfect binge for those who love crime dramas but hate their recycled tropes. Instead, this FX series offers a fresh take on the genre, one that’s filled with gore, melodrama, and — of course — motorcycles. It stars Charlie Hunnam as Jackson Teller, a member of an outlaw motorcycle club in California. The story follows Jackson, along with other members of the gang, as he grapples with his relationships both within and outside of the close-knit, and oftentimes dangerous, group. The show ran for seven action-packed seasons, its popularity drawing in lots of high ratings for the network. Here’s how to watch Sons of Anarchy online. Created By: Kurt Sutter Cast: Charlie Hunnam, Katey Sagal, Mark Boone Junior, Kim Coates, Tommy Flanagan Number of Seasons: 7 Watch Free on Hulu How to watch Sons of Anarchy online in the U.S. Hulu houses all seven seasons of the intense crime drama on its platform. The streaming service offers access to Sons of Anarchy, as well as other hit shows and movies, when you sign up for its monthly subscription. Luckily, the subscription includes a one-month free trial that can be easily canceled at its conclusion, giving you access to the series without having to pay any fees. However, if the month ends and you want to keep watching Sons of Anarchy or other Hulu content, you can continue with the subscription for $6 per month. Additionally, the platform offers another subscription plan that bars all ads for $12 per month. In any case, both plans include the monthlong free trial and all seven seasons of Sons of Anarchy, making Hulu the best — not to mention cheapest — way to stream the FX drama online. Unfortunately, no other streaming services offer access to Sons of Anarchy under the umbrella of their monthly subscription plans. Instead, you’ll have to buy individual episodes and seasons of the show. Seasons 1, 2, and 6 are available for purchase on Amazon Prime Video at $3 per episode and $18 per season. Additionally, seasons 3, 4, 5, and 7 of the show are available for $3 per episode and $20 per season. Alternatively, iTunes also sells episodes and seasons of Sons of Anarchy online for similar pricing. However, the platform does offer a complete series package for just $80 total, which will definitely save money for those bingers who are looking to watch every episode of the series. Sons of Anarchy aired its seventh and final season on FX in 2014. Although long over, the drama and gore of it all are still worth catching up on. Plus, FX has since created a spinoff series called Mayans M.C. that premiered in 2018 and is still churning out new episodes. So, there’s plenty more terrain to cover once you finish the original Sons of Anarchy. Editors’ Recommendations These days, you don’t need a cable package or even a television to enjoy full episodes of your favorite TV shows whenever you want. There are plenty of websites out there that let you stream free TV shows online — many of which include some of today’s most popular programs. The trick is finding the best sites, which isn’t always so easy to do. Many sites scam you into entering your credit card information or downloading something that could infect your computer/device with viruses. Maddy Price / Lifewire We’ve compiled a list of only the best free TV show sources currently out there. There are pros and cons to each, but there’s definitely something for everybody — no matter what kind of show you might be looking to watch. If you’re going to use an unofficial site to watch free TV, you’d best do your research to find out from other users whether it’s safe to do so first. Steer clear of any troublesome sites and check out the following high-quality, trusted streaming TV sites instead. We also keep an updated list of free movie streaming sites! With Crackle, you can watch full episodes of your favorite TV shows (in addition to movies) and create personal watch lists so you can keep track of everything you’re watching. Since it’s a totally free service with accessibility across multiple major platforms (including mobile with the free Crackle app), there are some commercials rolled into the programming. Regardless, Crackle is a great alternative that you can enjoy viewing on your computer or with one of its apps on your mobile device. All you need to do is create a free account to start watching. Select the TV tab in the top menu or search for a show title, then choose the episode you want and enjoy. You can also use filter options to browse through shows based on genre, alphabetical order, recently added, full episodes, clips, trailers and what’s coming soon. Tubi is another alternative that operates legally through license agreements. And just like Crackle, it also includes movies. Tubi is totally free with a user account, which you can use to set up your watch queue or pick up where you left off from watching something previously. The platform tracks your viewing history so that it can learn about your preferences to make better suggestions for you. Browse through all your standard categories such as Action, Drama, Comedy, and others or take a look at some of the interesting categories like Cult Classics and Highly Rated on Rotten Tomatoes. With over 50,000 shows and movies available and more being added all the time, Tubi TV is quickly growing to become a TV favorite for internet users everywhere. While Popcornflix is mainly known for its great range of full-length movies, documentaries, foreign films, and original web series, it’s also a great place to check out for unique TV shows that are hard to find anywhere else, including cable TV. If you’re a millennial looking for some serious childhood nostalgia, you’ll want to check out Popcornflix’s 90’s TV offering featuring classics such as The Legend of Zelda, Sonic the Hedgehog, The Adventures of Super Mario 3 Bros., and more. Its TV show offering isn’t exactly huge, but it might be worth checking out if you’re looking for something different. Pereroll ads will also play when you start watching, but you can start watching anything without having to sign up for a free account if you’re just looking to try it out quick. Vudu is Walmart’s pay-per-use TV show and movie streaming service, with a number of shows and movies available to watch for free. The free ones have ads, but for a platform that offers high-quality, relatively popular shows from networks like CBS, Fox, HBO and more, those ads are definitely tolerable. You can filter TV shows by genre or select the checkbox for Free TV only, which filters out all the paid content so all you see is what’s available to watch for free. As a nice bonus, you can also browse by Most Watched, Release Date and Recently Added to find hidden gems you might not be able to find otherwise. With the live-streaming Pluto TV platform, you can channel surf over 100 free channels in genres such as news, entertainment, sports, comedy, and more. Some of the content is live and some of it isn’t. It’s a bit like RabbitTV Plus, except you don’t have to pay an annual fee to watch. It’s similar to traditional cable; you can check out what’s currently on without a goal in mind for what to watch. Although you won’t be able to catch hit network shows, you’ll be able to tune into many major networks’ news broadcasts and find familiar episodes of other relatively popular shows. ShareTV is a search engine-like hub for TV shows (as well as movies). Described as a community-based website for fans of network television, the site claims to have every show you could possibly think of—complete with countdowns to the next new episode. Browse through genres or check out What’s New Tonight and Trending Shows. Select a show episode and use the checkbox options for Free, Purchase, Subscription, or TV Everywhere to find what you’re looking for. Selecting an episode will expand a summary and list of sources where you can watch it. Look for the tv_everywhere label, meaning it’s free to watch. Similar to ShareTV, Yidio is a TV show source aggregator that points you in the direction of other third-party hosts where you should be able to watch a particular episode. You can use the right sidebar to browse by genre and the menu at the top to filter available shows by what’s available on several premium streaming services. Of course, if you’re looking for something to watch for free, you’ll want to select the Free filter. When you select a show, you’ll be shown a summary based on IMDb info along with several thumbnails of episodes that are available. Select any thumbnail to be taken to the specific episode listing. The downside to using Yidio is that its free listings aren’t the most accurate or update to date, and you may come across a show that only has short clips rather than full episodes available to watch for free despite its listing in the Free category. There are lots of ads to Amazon, Google Play and iTunes in the way, but if the episode is indeed free, links to free sources (such as YouTube) will be available at the very bottom for you to click on. Previously Viewster, CONTV delivers content based on comics and virtually everything that the international comic book convention Comic-Con encompasses. The site includes thousands of hours of movies, shows and even live TV in every genre from horror and sci-fi to anime and modern. A lot of the content is free to stream, but you’ll see some ads. There’s an option to upgrade to an ad-free streaming experience for $6.99 a month. Unfortunately, not all content is free. The titles you see with padlock icons are locked behind premium memberships, which costs as little as $7.99, but also has quarterly and yearly plans for more savings. Shout Factory TV delivers over 2,000 hours of cult and classic TV shows that have helped shape today’s pop culture. This is a site where you’ll be able to find some of the most well-known shows and flicks that many other sites simply don’t have, making it a worthwhile site to add to your bookmarks. Everything can be watched for free with ads, or you can opt to get an ad-free subscription. As a digital channel, Shout Factory TV is also available on a variety of popular platforms including Apple TV, Roku, Samsung Smart TVs, Amazon Prime, Twitch and more. The major downside to using this site on the web is that there doesn’t appear to be a user account creation feature. So if you want to sign into an account to save videos, get new suggestions and pick up where you left off on what you were watching, you’re out of luck. If classic and retro TV is your thing, then you might as well check out Retrovision if you’re at all interested in going way back... to the 50s and 60s. The TV shows page on this particular website just includes a simple list, in alphabetical order, of all the shows and the year they were made. You can watch all of these classic shows directly on the site, with no ads (ads only appear around the site itself). A description is included with each beneath the player. The site appears to look more like a blog than a streaming platform, but it gets the job done. Just click on any title to start watching immediately. The Internet Archive isn’t an official streaming service, but it’s one of the best places to look for public access of digital content. You can access old websites, software, games, music, video content and a massive library of public domain books. In its Television section, you can browse through TV recordings that include shows, commercials and even government proceedings. Many of these pieces of content have hundreds of thousands of views. Content is organized into collections based on type. You can also use the filters on the left side to find shows by year, topic, collection, creator and language. Lots of people don’t realize that YouTube is actually a great place to look for television shows. While you won’t exactly get access to the most current or popular shows (unless you pay), nor a guaranteed high-quality viewing experience, you might still be pleasantly surprised by what’s available on the web’s largest video sharing network. Just search for a show title and see what comes up. For example, if you search Boy Meets World—an old ABC family sitcom from the 90s—several uploaded episodes from virtually every season will come up. On the other hand, if you search for Grey’s Anatomy—a more current and popular television drama—you’ll notice results will come up where you’ll have to pay a fee to stream it legally on YouTube. Some people get away with uploading popular TV show episodes for a certain time before they’re eventually reported or caught by YouTube. Depending on the timing and the show you’re looking for, you might be able to find something that actually shouldn’t be there due to copyright restrictions. If you are in the UK or love UK programming, then you’ll want to know about TVPlayer. This free TV streaming service offers 95 channels for free on both desktop and mobile devices, including shows that are currently airing live. 30 premium channels are available to users who upgrade to a Plus account for a monthly fee. (Sorry, U.S. readers; this site is just for readers across the pond.) Free channels include popular ones like BBC 1, Discovery, ITV, Dave, Five, History, Lifetime and many more. All you have to do to sign up is create an account with your email address, verify your account creation and start watching! Obviously, the big downside with this one is that it’s restricted to users in the UK. If you’re located somewhere else, like in the US, you can still create an account and sign in, but if you try to watch something, TVPlayer will first check to make sure you’re in the UK and will block access if you’re not. Given that so many people have discovered the many advantages of Virtual Private Networks (VPNs), it’s possible that you could get around TVPlayer’s geographical restrictions if you tried. Having said that, more streaming services are seriously cracking down on the VPN trend (like Netflix for example, so don’t be surprised if TVPlayer doesn’t work with your VPN either! If you have a TV show you love and you want to watch it for free because you missed it or maybe you don’t get that channel, a great way to catch up on it is to visit the network’s website and see if it’s available for streaming. All of the networks below show some full episodes but also clips as well. Here are some of the popular TV networks out there that provide options for streaming their TV shows: NBC: NBC does a great job of quickly posting and keeping their TV shows around so you have plenty of time to watch them. It’s even possible for you to catch up on an entire series right from their website. USA: Part of NBC, the USA Network brings you access to all of your favorite USA shows, including full episodes the day after they’ve aired. ABC: They have full-length videos of the latest episode of every show as well as video clips, highlights, and sneak peeks into all your favorite ABC shows. CBS: At CBS you can watch shows for free after they’ve aired on CBS. There are quite a few advertiser interruptions during the streaming video, but you’ll know when they’re coming because they are clearly marked on the screen. CW TV: Watch your favorite CW TV network shows — no subscription required. While you’re at it, you should also check out CW Seed. DisneyNOW: You can watch Disney channel movies at DisneyNOW. There’s a page that lists all the shows you can watch, plus some free category pages. FOX: FOX posts free TV shows for you to watch one day after they’ve aired on TV but they remain locked so that you can watch them until eight days after they’ve aired. The CW: The day after the CW television shows air you’ll be able to watch them for free at their website. PBS: PBS has a ton of free TV episodes online including Masterpiece Theater, PBS NewsHour, and Frontline. MTV: MTV has full episodes of all your favorite MTV shows, including clips and after shows. Freeform (ABC Family): The day after the TV shows on Freeform air, they are put online so that you can enjoy them. A&E: Watch full episodes of shows like Bates Motel, Storage Wars, and Dog the Bounty Hunter. You might be required to provide your television provider information to watch certain streaming content on network platforms. Thanks for letting us know!
