Lain uses his personal computer
Serial Experiments Lain is a anime series on a teenage girl in suburban Japan called Lain Iwakura, and its introduction to Wired, an international computer network. The original idea of the series was produced by production 2, the story was written by Chiaki J. Konaka, and the original design of the character was made by Yoshitoshi Abe. Lain is produced in English in North America by Geneon and Singapore by Odex. Serial Experiments Lain asks questions about God, the collective unconscious, the Internet, and many other common themes in the ciberpunk literature. Fans of the series generally believe it is a good example of souls such as literature, inviting and rewarding critical analysis. Trama The series begins with the suicide of Chisa Yomoda. Lain Iwakura is one of the classmates of Chisa who receives a posthumous email from Chisa explaining that she abandoned her meat and is still alive in the Wired (a large network of computers with surprising similarities to the Internet). Lain begins to provisionally explore the Wired and the series follows its passage from the normal student to the ubiquitous being on the Internet and collective unconsciousness. Publications and other media The Lain franchise was originally designed to connect through different forms of media (anime, video game, manga). Producer Yasuyuki Ueda said in an interview with Animerica (Vol. 7 n. 9), "The approach I took for this project was to communicate the essence of work from the total sum of many multimedia products." The scenario for the video game was first written, and the video game was produced simultaneously with the anime, although the anime was released first. The series was played for 13 episodes of a half hour each, between July 6 and September 28, 1998, on TV Tokyo. A Playstation game of the same name was released on 26 November 1998.
