It was also the number three injury, behind bullets and shrapnel, in both world wars, that disabled soldiers. Outside TV Podcasts Maps Events Shop Outside+ Discover Outdoor Products The elk gave you the slip an hour ago, vanished into some distant dark timber. The sun, sinking fast, dropped behind a solid bank of cloud cover, and the temperature is plummeting. Sure you're walking South, you stop, look around. Didn't you pass that lightning-cleaved pine 20 minutes ago? You check you compass, again. It says North. But you're thinking, "No way!" Face it, You're lost. Do you know what to do next? Should you stay put or keep walking. Can you choose the right camping spot, make a fire, find the North Star, signal for help? In short, can you survive? Take this 12-question quiz to see if you would make the right decision to save your own life. 1) You're hunting in unfamiliar wilderness, and you're concerned about getting lost. You'll be able to find your way to safety as long as you can orient your position with respect to which of the following guideposts: [ A ] A prominent peak, pond or other feature of land marked on the map [ B ] A baseline such as a road or river [ C ] A trailhead or parking lot [ D ] The sun 2) You become aware that you have lost your bearings. Your first step is to: [ A ] Stop walking and immediately make camp [ B ] Follow the nearest watercourse in a downstream direction [ C ] Gain a ridgetop for a vantage [ D ] Mark your position and try to navigate back to the last place that seemed familiar 3) You know that a calm, clear-thinking head is your most important survival tool, and recognizing the first stages of panic can help you regroup and focus. What behavior is a sure indication that you're losing your cool? [ A ] Walking in a circle [ B ] Breaking into a trot [ C ] Dropping your rifle and pack so you can move more freely [ D ] Turning downhill to find a creekbottom to lead you to safety 4) Even if you're lost, you can fix your position on a topographic map as long as you can do which of the following things: [ A ] See two landmarks marked on the map [ B ] See one landmark marked on the map and orient your compass with respect to the sun [ C ] Estimate your pace, direction, and time traveled from a fixed location on the map [ D ] Take a bearing with your compass to a prominent landmark marked on the map ** 5) You're definitely lost, and it's getting dark. Which camping spot will be the warmest once the sun goes down? ** [ A ] A forested south slope [ B ] A forested north slope [ C ] An open south slope [ D ] A creekbottom 6) The weather is bad, and you only have matches.
